In addition to offering its users the ability to create their own short videos and make money from their efforts, it is also possible to post videos that have already been created by other individuals. This feature has also attracted criticism because it appears that people are getting paid for using TikTok's platforms as a means to promote certain products and services. For example, in the January 2021, it was noted that some people were being paid to post videos on TikTok encouraging viewers to buy products from Amway. As many of the creators of these videos are also making money from their efforts by promoting these products, it is possible that they may be getting paid for creating a review video for someone's product. Once again, this is something that requires people to rely on their own judgement in order to decide whether or not they feel comfortable using this feature.",

On September 6, 2021, TikTok collaborated with the BBC to launch a series called "Ask Me Anything." Users were able to submit questions about anything from their personal lives to what they thought about politics. The videos were branded with BBC's logo and had a link to the channel on the app. After the videos had been posted, the company announced that they would be taking action against any inappropriate content on the app. The company said that there were "two clear issues around our policy" and that they would be working to fix it. The first was that "the app is for 14+" and that children under 14 were able to register on the app even if they did not have consent from their parents. The second issue was a lack of enforcement when it came to inappropriate content in videos. Following this event, people under 18 were no longer able to create accounts on TikTok without consent from their parents or an adult guardian. The company also said that they wanted to give young people a platform to express themselves and help them understand that they can have fun but not in a way that could cause harm to others.",
